

their former employers face similar struggles to provide it—state policies continue to raise the costs of living paid by all households in order to promote use of specific technologies that continue to be consumed at far greater levels by those with higher incomes.